

WHAT NOW?

This is not a novel from a famous actor, ex-president or person you have watched every night on the news the past four years. It is from Allen A. Ambrosino, a thirty-something regular guy who has been able to parlay limited funds and a lust for travel into creating memories, while the rest of his friends were putting down payments on homes and buying the latest BMW convertible. What Now? is the opportunity to share some of these memories through its written pages.

You will be taken into the shark cage, going face-to-face with multiple great whites, off the coast of South Africa. After that, time will be spent in Uganda tracking mountain gorillas, and then Ambrosino will bring you to the place in Vietnam where his father landed as a draftee over thirty years before. Without leaving your easy chair, you will run the SF Marathon, get deported from a third-world country and journey on a parade float in the middle of India next to a giant pink elephant's head. And hopefully, you will call your travel agent and start making memories of your own. Happy travels, my new friend.

ALLEN A. AMBROSINO has traveled to sixty-seven countries in his lifetime, encompassing six continents and countless other islands around the globe. Being the first of the day to summit Kilimanjaro, singing to the midnight moon with the children of Malawi and wreckdiving the Thistlegorm, a WWII ship found in the depths of the Red Sea, are just a few of his experiences. His previous books, Learning To Fly and Walk High...Sleep Low..., are available at his travel website www.backpackernation.com.
